

Contacting Your Business & Economics Librarian

Transcript of video published to the BUEC Buzz on 30 March 2020 by Mark Bodnar – mbodnar@sfu.ca

Scene 1: Intro slide. No voiceover.

Scene 2: Desert Island:

In these difficult times, it can be easy to think that terms like “self-isolating” and “self distancing” mean you are all alone.

Of course, you are never really alone in this age of social media.

Scene 3: Lonely at desk

Yet, when you’re sitting at home doing research for your courses, it can still feel very lonely.

Scene 4: SFU Library – Help

Remember that if you’re having trouble with your research, SFU’s Librarians are available to help.

Whether it’s through our many online guides and tutorials, or through our AskAway and WriteAway services... we’re HERE for you!

Scene 5: Contacting me

And if the topics you are researching involve business or economics, then you are welcome to contact me...

My name is Mark Bodnar. I’m a Business & Economics Librarian at SFU.

The best way to reach me is by email: [mbodnar@sfu.ca].

Depending on the help you need, we can then continue the conversation by email, phone, FaceTime, Skype, Zoom... whatever it takes to get your research back on track.

Again, though, the best way to start our conversation is by email. I check my email often and will get back to you as soon as I can.

Scene 6: Bottom line

In the end, we both want the same thing: For you to find the information you need. Please do email me if you need help.

Good luck with your research!
